Vote for the countryside in 2010: CPRE launches manifesto

On Wednesday 10 February the Campaign to Protect Rural England (CPRE), a member of The Heritage Alliance, launched its General Election 2010 manifesto Make the Countryside Count.

The publication of the manifesto comes following the launch of CPRE's vision statement in May last year,

2026 - A Vision for the Countryside, and calls on the next Government for progress in three key areas: 21st century planning, protecting the human habitat and action on litter and fly-tipping.

Ben Stafford, Head of Campaigns at CPRE, said on launch day: "This year's General Election is a critical moment for England's countryside. The promises politicians make now will determine whether the countryside becomes a better, more beautiful and more inspirational place, or is condemned to death by a thousand cuts. We can't afford the countryside to go missing in this election. If it does, the chances are it won't be a priority for whichever party forms the next Government. We all need to vote for the countryside in 2010, before it's too late."

Going Local: The National Trust launches new strategy described as "cultural revolution"

10 February was a busy day for our members; at a press conference in London on Wednesday morning, The National Trust launched its new strategy Going Local.

At the centre of the new strategy is the concept of NT properties functioning as community spaces, to involve local residents more in the daily life of the property and widen the Trust's appeal to new audiences. Seaton Delaval, the Trust's newly acquired Northumberland property (Update 178), has been cited as an example of the new approach in action; local residents are writing pieces for the Guidebook, the village school, Parish Council and other local groups will be using rooms on a regular basis for activities and meetings, and instead of a teashop the local café owner will be selling refreshments from a stall in the grounds. Summing up the new strategy, Director General Fiona Reynolds said: "If we're to truly fulfill our original, radical purpose, we have to reach out in this way – to local residents, to people who feel the National Trust isn't for them. We have to make contact with people in a new way."

At the time of going to press the full strategy had not been published publicly. To view the full strategy

Going Local was covered in The Guardian on 10 February

Number of conservation posts hit new low in 2009

The Institute of Historic Building Conservation's (IHBC – a member of The Heritage Alliance) annual analysis of local authority conservation recruitment in England paints a worrying picture for the sector. The research showed a further drop in 2009, with the number of jobs advertised falling to a new low (since the IHBC began the annual evaluation in 1998).

There has been a continuing decline from a peak of 158 in 2003-2004 to just 43 in 2009. As IHBC comments: "The new low in figures also underpins anecdotal evidence from the Institute's network of frozen recruitment, disestablishment or the downgrading of posts as a result of local government restructuring and public expenditure cuts. This is all despite the statutory nature of much of the work being undertaken and the progress of heritage protection reform, the success of which relies on local authorities delivering effective services."

IHBC Director Seán O'Reilly said: "We have here a worrying indicator of a wholly unsustainable situation in England, and we have no evidence from our own network that things are much different elsewhere across the UK."

Penfold Review: BIS reviews consents

The Department for Business Innovation and Skills has been getting to grips with heritage protection reform through Adrian Penfold's Review of Non Planning Consents (Update 178).

The Alliance's Spatial Planning Advocacy Group held a special meeting with the Joint Committee of National Amenity Societies prior to submitting formal responses. Representatives of these and other heritage NGOs have also been interviewed as part of the Review of listed building and conservation area consents.

The Alliance points out that these non planning consents have a critical role mediating between the desire of an owner to develop a property as they see fit and the public benefit derived from maintaining the character and significance of historic assets and areas. These consents strengthen the fundamental principle of the UK planning system, to put longer term national values ahead of shorter term commercial gain.

The Societies, which are statutory consultees, offer free advice and guidance to help councils reach an informed decision about the suitability of proposals: "Non planning consents provide valuable safeguards but are not intended (nor do we see them) as an impediment to change and economic development." The Joint Committee's experience suggests that developers and investors generally accept the existence of controls to protect the historic environment but wish for certainty about cost, obligations and restrictions.

Both the Alliance and the JCNAS responses stress that the Heritage Bill would bring greater certainty to all concerned, the development industry, Local Planning Authorities and the heritage NGOs that care for their communities and historic environments. Perhaps BIS may prove an ally in speeding its introduction? Visit <http://www.heritagelink.org.uk/2010/02/08/the-penfold-review-consultation-response/> Back

Construction Skills Competencies Scheme (CSCS) Heritage Skills cards re-launched to mixed reception
Sir Michael Latham, Chairman of Construction Skills, has joined with other industry partners to call for more craftspeople and building professionals in the built heritage sector to apply for a special CSCS heritage skills card. In a speech to clients, contractors, trainers, professional bodies and industry groups at the German Gymnasium, St Pancras, London on 9 February, he stressed the need for the right blend of skills, expertise, knowledge and experience - visit <http://www.cskills.org/newsandevents/news/heritage-cscs.aspx>

The CSCS card was developed jointly by Construction Skills and the National Heritage Training Group (NHTG) and launched in September 2008, as a response to the NHTG's research findings that around two thirds of those who work on pre-1919 buildings do not have the right skills to do so (most commonly because the vast majority are general builders who move from new-build to repair and maintenance). It is hoped that this call for more people to sign up for the scheme will help to further integrate this highly-skilled sector into mainstream construction practice, as well as contributing to maintaining heritage building stock in a sustainable and sympathetic manner. A new Quick Guide to CSCS for the Built Heritage Sector was also launched, but at the time of going to press this was not yet available on the website – keep an eye out at www.cscs.uk.com or <http://www.nhtg.org.uk/> or ring 0844 576 8777 for a paper copy.

John Edwards from English Heritage's Conservation Department said: "English Heritage now asks for crafts persons employed by contractors working on its own estate of over 400 historic sites to hold the CSCS Heritage Skills Card for all new contracts. We hope that in future this will be mandatory, once the number of cards has reached a viable level, but in accordance with EU procurement regulations. This will help improve the quality of the workforce which will help to ensure better treatment of historic buildings."

The Heritage Lottery Fund has commented: "HLF welcomes any initiative designed to raise the standards of skills in the heritage sector, but we also have reservations about any attempt to introduce a mandatory requirement for an accredited workforce. We believe it is an impractical proposition that may prevent some people from accessing our funds, and we therefore have no intention of introducing such a requirement as a condition under our grant programmes at this time. We agree that opportunities for education and training programmes should be the priority, and we continue to invest in these initiatives through our Training Bursaries and Skills for the Future programmes." #### Ecclesiastical Exemption (Listed Buildings and Conservation Areas) Order 2010: consultation

The Department for Culture, Media and Sport (DCMS) has recently announced a consultation on the revised Ecclesiastical Exemption Order and associated guidance. Under the Ecclesiastical Exemption (Listed Buildings and Conservation Areas) Order 1994 (1994 No 1771), certain church denominations (the Church of England, the Roman Catholic Church, the Methodist Church, the United Reformed Church and the Baptist Union of England) are exempt from the need to obtain local authority consent to carry out works to church buildings that are listed as being of historic or architectural interest, or are situated in conservation areas. DCMS defines the reasons for making a new order as: "the need to resolve a longstanding issue whereby a range of buildings are currently not protected either by local authority or by denominational systems of control; the opportunity to reduce instances of 'dual control', where works to a building need consents from both local authority and denominational bodies; and the need to update some of the references to church buildings to reflect current denominational ownership and stewardship arrangements."

The consultation seeks views on whether the policy intent is achieved by the wording of the draft Order and the content of the draft Guidance; not comments on the policy intent itself, following two previous rounds of consultation at the White Paper and Draft Bill stages of the Heritage Protection Bill. This is a shortened six week consultation, closing on 15 March.

Responses should be emailed to jeremy.dann@culture.gsi.gov.uk by 15 March. #### IHBC Corporate Strategy 2010-2015: consultation

The IHBC has launched a consultation on its draft Corporate Strategy 2010-2015 Conservation in Change: Building Capacity for Sustainable Living, which outlines how it might move forward over the next five years. Feedback, comments, advice and support are invited.

Seán O'Reilly, IHBC Director, said: "We've consulted extensively within and outside our institute, looking both at our current situation and forward planning. Following our work, we've come up with proposals that we think can build on our substantial infrastructure and our more recent successes, as well as give focus to our future. We're now looking for thoughts about these proposals, and of course more concrete suggestions."

Transfer of heritage assets: successful case studies requested

English Heritage, in partnership with the Communities and Local Government's Asset Transfer Unit, is preparing guidance in response to the Quirke Review which encouraged local authorities to transfer surplus or underused property to community groups. It is supported by the Architectural Heritage Fund, the Prince's Regeneration Trust and National Trust (all Alliance members) and the Heritage Lottery Fund.

The new guidance Our Common Heritage: Transforming Liabilities into Assets is aimed at anyone disposing of or taking on heritage assets. It will help promote successful and sustainable outcomes by signposting existing advice and illustrating examples of good practice for all types of heritage assets, including historic buildings and public open spaces. Issues to be addressed will include stock surveys, specialist advice, feasibility studies, risk assessment, project development and funding.

Nicholas Falk, Director of URBED the not-for-profit urban regeneration consultancy undertaking the guidance, says: "We need to understand the conditions when the opportunity to transfer heritage assets to community groups are right and when not and to document examples of successful handovers that may go back many years".

If you can contribute experience, advice or suggestions for case studies, please would you let URBED know by the end of February at c.farrell@urbed.com Back

Entry Level Stewardship applications resume

Farmers can now resume applying to join Entry Level Stewardship (ELS) after an upgrade of the applications system by Natural England. The ELS scheme delivers over £400 million a year to farmers and landowners, enabling them to enhance the natural environment including historic features and historic designed landscapes see the Land Use Policy Group (LUPG) report

<http://www.lupg.org.uk/Default.aspx?page=143>

Farmers and land managers now have access to a faster, clearer applications process based on enhanced software and the latest maps from the Rural Payments Agency. The improved ELS Online system is being introduced at an important time, with 12,000 ELS agreements coming up for renewal this year. Natural England has significantly stepped up the level of ELS training and information in order to help farmers apply for ELS and choose the best options for their farm. Workshops, events and one-to-one farm visits are available with advice covering birds and wildlife as well as protecting soil, water and historic features, whilst gaining the financial benefits of ELS.

The 3rd Edition Environmental Stewardship Handbooks for Entry Level Stewardship (ELS), Organic Entry Level Stewardship (OELS) and Higher Level Stewardship (HLS) are now available. For further information on the applications process and events visit

New environmental payment scheme for Uplands farmers

On 9 February, a new payment reward scheme for hill farmers who protect England's iconic uplands (such as the Yorkshire Dales, Dartmoor and the Lake District) was launched by Environment Minister Huw Irranca-Davies. Through Uplands ELS, hill farmers will be rewarded for maintaining traditional features of these landscapes such as dry stone walls and stone faced hedge banks, as well as looking after local wildlife, biodiversity and watercourses. Up to £31 million from the Rural Development Programme will be made available to fund all farmers who qualify for the scheme.

Farmers and land managers can visit

<http://www.naturalengland.org.uk/ourwork/farming/funding/es/default.aspx> to find out if they're eligible and to apply. Application packs should be returned by 1 May for an Uplands ELS agreement to begin on 1 July.

A greener future for England's Green Belt: new report published

Nearly 13 per cent of England is covered by Green Belt. These stretches of green space not only defend the countryside against urban sprawl and retain the character of towns and cities; they also provide a vital green lung for the 60 per cent of the population who live within their urban boundaries.

A new report from the Campaign to Protect Rural England (CPRE – a member of The Heritage Alliance) and Natural England Green Belts: A Greener Future, assesses to what extent Green Belts are fulfilling their purposes and positive land use objectives, and makes recommendations for the future. Shaun Spiers, Chief Executive of CPRE, said: "This report confirms that the countryside around our largest and most historic towns and cities is a vital, but fragile, environmental asset. We must continue to strengthen our Green Belts and make full use of the opportunities they provide to allow people to appreciate their local countryside. Where Green Belt land is underused, or in poor condition, the answer is to improve its quality, not to build on it." The report highlights a number of actions to ensure Green Belt continues to deliver wide-ranging benefits for the natural environment and local residents. These include recognising and protecting the Green Belt with "renewed focus on active management of the land"; investing in and improving Green Belt in a number of ways whilst protecting its character; and connecting Green Belt land to areas designated for their environmental importance, urban green spaces and the wider countryside to form green networks to tackle climate change and improve health.

Planning Act 2008: new guidance and consultation response published

Four new documents under the Planning Act 2008 were published on 1 February; The Infrastructure Planning (Fees) Regulations 2010 Guidance (this is non-statutory guidance to aid interpretation of the Infrastructure Planning (Fees) Regulations 2010); a summary of responses on the Consultation on Examination Procedures for Nationally Significant Infrastructure Projects (a summary of responses made to public consultation on the draft examination procedures and fees conducted between 14 July 2009 and 5 October 2009 and an outline of the Government's response to the points raised during consultation and any changes made to the secondary legislation and guidance); Guidance for the Examination of Applications for Development Consent for Nationally Significant Infrastructure Projects (guidance on how such applications are to be examined by the Infrastructure Planning Commission) and Guidance Related to Procedures for Compulsory Acquisition (relating to applications for orders granting development consent which include provision authorising the compulsory acquisition of land). Last surviving operational WW2 motor boats saved for the nation

Portsmouth Naval Base Property Trust has acquired a pair of World War Two motorboats, following a £580,000 grant from the National Heritage Memorial Fund and £150,000 from other donors. Both boats were active in the war, with MGB 81 receiving the battle honour 'Normandy 1944' for its service in the D-Day landings and HSL 102 retrieving shot down airmen at sea during the Battle of Britain from its base at RAF Calshot. The vessels were neglected for decades before being discovered and restored by enthusiasts Robin and Phil Clabburn: "We were near to having to consider breaking them up. I also really did not want to sell them abroad as they are a crucial part of British World War Two naval history — almost the last reminders of vital episodes."

Currently on display at Gunwharf Quays Marina in Portsmouth, plans are underway to use the boats to give visitors a real hands-on experience of what it was like for the crews driving at full speed. For the full story visit <http://news.bbc.co.uk/1/hi/uk/8505497.stm> Back

PQ elucidates Government policy on historic ships

Plymouth's acquisition of the two WW2 motorboats comes the week after a Parliamentary Question from the town's MP Alison Seabeck (26 January), asking what progress the Department for Culture, Media and Sport (DCMS) has made on the development and implementation of a policy on historic ships. Culture Minister Margaret Hodge replied: "The Department's policy on historic ships was developed in response to the DCMS public consultation on 'Ships for the Nation' in 2003 and the Select Committee hearing on maritime heritage and historic ships in 2004-05. This led to the creation of the Advisory Committee for national historic ships in July 2006. This committee advises the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport on policy and priorities for the historic ships sector; coordinates work within the sector to assist those directly engaged in preservation; and promotes public interest in historic ships as a key component of the maritime heritage. In addition to advising on priorities for the sector, the committee uses its funding to compile and maintain the national register of historic vessels; to provide strategic development grants to assist owners, trusts and societies responsible for vessels included on the national register." #### Young Roots: Funding available to engage young people with heritage

The Heritage Lottery Fund (HLF) dedicates £3million per year to its Young Roots grants programme, which gives grants ranging from £3,000 to £25,000 to fund projects that engage young people aged 13-25 with heritage. More than 50,000 young people have so far benefited from £20m of Young Roots funding; developing new skills, building confidence and connecting with their local heritage and communities. Heritage organisations have benefited too; gaining new audiences and volunteers, the ideas and enthusiasm of young people and the experience to involve young people further in the future. Projects have involved all types of heritage, from historic ships and parks to local legends and the influence of the past on contemporary culture. Young people have created films and exhibitions, repaired dry stone walls and researched community histories.

Young Roots funding is available now. To apply, heritage organisations should find a partner youth organisation to help deliver the project and enable young people to take a leading role. Interested organisations can take a look at these examples of successful partnership projects for inspiration and ideas:

Cleaning up and researching the history of Belfast City Cemetery

Restoring a motorcycle at the National Museums of Scotland for Wheels of Time

Kids in Museums: new manifesto published

Kids in Museums is an independent charity set up with the aim of guiding museums, galleries and sites across Britain to make family visits enjoyable. Compiled entirely from the feedback of visitors, the 2010 Manifesto includes 20 points to make museums, galleries and sites more welcoming for all families. Kids in Museums states: "the Manifesto leads the way on important issues, from flexible family tickets to somewhere to leave the pram and pushchair." Top of the list, besides being welcoming, is the lack of flexible family tickets on offer – because not all families are nuclear. Following up on this point, Kids in Museums launched the Flexible Family Ticket Campaign consultation, commissioned and funded by the Department for Children, Schools and Families and supported by the Department for Culture, Media and Sport. Results of the consultation will be published in April.

Recognising Rural Interests within Regional Strategies: new briefing note

The Commission for Rural Communities (CRC) has published a briefing note intended to provide Responsible Regional Authorities (RRAs) and stakeholders with a refresher of the key mainstream and rural policies (including protecting the natural environment, investment in skills in rural areas and “more sophisticated planning and development processes”) that should inform the drafting of Regional Strategies. The document sets out various “rural proofing” measures and outlines a range of key issues through which rural areas can contribute to regional strategies, including the untapped potential within some rural economies, the need to address critical challenges in terms of housing, planning, employment and skills and lack of digital infrastructure.

Digital Heritage Bill: second reading set for 12 March

Tom Watson MP (Labour, West Bromwich East) presented the Digital Heritage Bill to the House of Commons on 20 January. The Bill aims to alter copyright law to allow specified cultural institutions to make digital copies of artefacts for archival purposes, notwithstanding the existence of any intellectual property right.

Mr Watson told the house: “They need to be able to preserve their works, shift formats over time and make our heritage available. My Bill will allow cultural works that are often rotting on shelves awaiting copyright clearance to be saved for digital archiving purposes.”

Currently cultural institutions are hampered by laws that were intended to address “the problems of the analogue age” and the UK has “far more stringent restrictions on copying classes of work for archival and preservation purposes than other countries”.

The Private Members’ Bill will now be printed and will have a second reading debate on 12 March. For more information on the Bill visit <http://services.parliament.uk/bills/2009-10/digitalheritage.html> Back

Do you have a venue for hire?

Over the course of the year The Heritage Alliance will be partnering with a variety of organisations to run a number of country-wide seminars and workshops for the heritage sector. We would love to hear from any heritage organisations across England that have venues available to hire for a range of events from small workshops of 20 people to large conferences of 100 plus. Using these venues would help us to showcase local heritage assets and to retain spending within the sector. If you have a venue for hire please send details to Karen Bewick at karen.bewick@heritagelink.org.uk or by post to Karen Bewick, Heritage Protection Reform Coordinator, The Heritage Alliance, Clutha House, 10 Storey’s Gate, London SW1P 3AY. #### Final piece in funding jigsaw for Cutty Sark confirmed

The historic clipper Cutty Sark’s mast and spars will soon tower over the Maritime Greenwich World Heritage Site once again, following an announcement from the Department for Culture, Media and Sport (DCMS) on 4 February that it will provide the final £3m needed for the Cutty Sark Trust to complete the conservation project. The project stepped up following the devastating fire that gutted the ship in May 2007, caused by a vacuum cleaner left on overnight. In total £46m was needed to fund the project, with the bulk of funding coming from the Heritage Lottery Fund supported by the London Borough of Greenwich, private donors, the Greater London Authority and DCMS. The work will be completed at Greenwich next year, in time for the Olympic and Diamond Jubilee celebrations in 2012. For the full story visit <http://www.cuttysark.org.uk/index.cfm?fa=contentNews.newsDetails&newsID=186623&from=list&directoryId=8> Back

Empty shops transformed into community learning centres: a model for the future?

Vacant shops in the town-centres of Taunton and Blackburn will be transformed into 'creative and learning centres' designed to actively involve local people into informal learning and community project work. The projects, funded by a grant to the Museums, Libraries and Archives Council (MLA) from The Department for Business, Innovation and Skills (BIS) Learning Revolution Transformation Fund aims to encourage adults who may have not participated in learning activities previously to get involved in plans for their community and acquire new skills in a relaxed environment. Taunton high street's shop opened on 8 February as a base for the Our Place, Your Place: Taunton project, which aims to bring residents together through a programme of exhibitions and activities to share memories, pictures and thoughts of the town's past, present and future. The MLA has been awarded £100,000 from the £20 million Learning Revolution Transformation Fund, to open up new informal adult learning opportunities for people from disadvantaged groups. #### Land Use Change Statistics \(England 2008\) - provisional estimates published

On 28 January 2010 the latest national statistics on Land Use Change (LUCs) were released under the auspices of the UK Statistics Authority. LUCs Statistics are annual data presenting provisional figures on Land Use Change in England. The latest release provides estimates for 2008 of changes on previously developed land and the average density of new dwellings. In 2008, on a provisional estimate, 80 per cent of dwellings (including conversions) were built on previously-developed land compared to 77 per cent in 2007; new dwellings were built at an average density of 43 dwellings per hectare, unchanged from 2007; 2 per cent of dwellings were built within the Green Belt (unchanged since 2004) and 7 per cent of land changing to residential use (from any use) was within the Green Belt (an increase from 5 per cent in 2007).
