PPS 5 for the Historic Environment and Practice Guide published this week

The Heritage Alliance this week welcomed the publication of Planning Policy Statement 5 (PPS5) for the Historic Environment and the accompanying Practice Guide, as representing a significant milestone in the drive towards a heritage protection system fit for the 21st century.

The streamlined PPS5 (consulted on under the title PPS15) replaces the existing planning guidance in PPGs15 and 16. It introduces a number of new concepts to encourage better understanding and management of the historic environment. The Alliance and its members worked closely with the Department for Communities and Local Government (CLG), the Department for Culture, Media and Sport (DCMS) and English Heritage (EH) throughout the consultation period, to ensure that the new concepts are robust enough to enable positive change whilst upholding current levels of heritage protection. The Practice Guide, written by English Heritage, explains how the policies in the PPS can be applied and considered during the planning process.

Dr Mike Heyworth, Chair of The Heritage Alliance's Spatial Planning Advocacy Group, said: "Heritage is proven to be instrumental in delivering economic prosperity and community cohesion through quality place-making. As such, it deserves to be a key consideration in modern planning policy. PPS5 represents a significant step forward in the Government's recognition of the true value of our nation's heritage. Together with the Government Vision statement there is now clear direction on how to leverage and safeguard this vital resource for future generations".

Chair of English Heritage, Baroness Andrews, said: "the PPS brings heritage planning guidance into line with wider changes to planning legislation and English Heritage's own best practice and allows for simpler, more transparent decisions which reflect the significance of the asset and its setting. The publication of PPS5 is a milestone in the positive and proactive management of the historic environment."

Nevertheless, concerns remain over resource implications for local authorities. The PPS comes at a time when there is substantial evidence of the depletion of local authority conservation and planning expertise. In an attempt to overcome this challenge, The Heritage Alliance is working with English Heritage on developing a comprehensive training and guidance programme on PPS5 for a range of stakeholders.

Mike Heyworth comments: "There is a risk that the burden on local authority resources has been underestimated. Training and guidance should mitigate this, but a timely review following the implementation of PPS5 and Guidance would guard against any drop in heritage protection levels. This should be the next step for any new Government, closely followed by a Heritage Protection Act to underpin new planning policy".

Long-awaited Vision Statement for the Historic Environment also published this week

At last, the Government's Statement on the value of the historic environment, with formal support from all Departments across Whitehall, is published to complement and underpin Planning Policy Statement 5 and the PPS5 Planning Practice Guide. Until a Heritage Protection Bill is passed this suite of value statements is the benchmark for the protection of our historic environment for the foreseeable future. Is it enough?

The Alliance welcomes the Statement. It follows in a long line of declarations: A Force for our Future (2001), Better Places to Live (2005), and World Class Places (2009). But this one is the clearest statement yet of the benefits and solutions that heritage brings to 21st century life. It makes clear that most heritage is outside direct Government control, and that Government therefore needs to work in partnership with the private and voluntary sectors.

The Statement asserts that "the historic environment is an asset of enormous cultural, social, economic and environmental value", and it spells out the many ways in which the historic environment can help Government achieve its broader goals. The Statement recognises that heritage is all around us: "in the homes of ordinary people, in the street plans of historic towns and cities, in farm buildings and factories, in our public places, beneath our seas". Significantly it acknowledges the role that the historic environment can play in mitigating and adapting to climate change.

The test for the Statement will be how these warm words are interpreted by other Government Departments, whose policies impact directly or indirectly on the historic environment. Phrases such as 'Intelligent management' and 'strong and effective partnership' need to be translated into reality.

It is up to us all to hold this and future Governments to account; to quote the Statement and to exploit that aspirational first line of the Vision: "that the value of the historic environment is recognised by all who have the power to shape it". For the Vision Statement, visit

The Budget: DCMS efficiency plan

Yesterday's Budget (24 March) reaffirmed the Government's commitment to making £11bn of 'efficiency' savings a year by 2012/13. All Government Departments were required to produce an efficiency plan to help provide the £11bn in public sector savings. The Department for Culture Media and Sport (DCMS) has produced its plan – which aims to save £60m – and a statement on the proposed cuts.

There is no significant direct impact on tourism. The economies will be made by saving £10m by merging the British Film Institute and the UK Film Council, and the National Lottery Commission and the Gambling Commission. A further £15m will be saved through increasing collaborative procurement across all its Non-Departmental Public Bodies. The remaining £35m will come from meeting the Department's share of reductions in other savings announced in Smarter Government, on back office spending, reducing consultancy and reducing marketing and communications spending across its arms length bodies. The Heritage Alliance in culture manifesto launch

The Heritage Alliance, as part of a national consortium (made up of Arts Council England, English Heritage, Museums Libraries and Archives Council, National Campaign for the Arts, Heritage Lottery Fund, Art Fund and others) launched a manifesto for the cultural life of Britain this morning (25 March).

Cultural Capital: a manifesto for the future demonstrates how investing in culture will build Britain's social and economic recovery. Luminaries of the arts and cultural world argued that reduction of public investment would make poor economic sense: "As the eyes of the world are on Britain during the Olympic year, 2012, sustained funding is essential if our cultural institutions and attractions are to realise the opportunity that 2012 presents to create a lasting legacy of more people taking part in arts and culture, and to enhance our international profile".

The manifesto points out that the arts and heritage agencies have already contributed £2.2bn from their National Lottery income to the London 2012 Olympics; and this year alone has made extensive contributions to public sector savings through the £20m cut to overall DCMS grant in aid allocation of 2009. This is in addition to savings made to administrative costs by individual agencies. Over the last 12 years, English Heritage has lost £130m in grant aid.

House debates future of Listed Places of Worship grant scheme

Following his attendance at the launch of the POWalliance manifesto on 4 March, Tony Baldry MP (Banbury, Conservative) asked a useful question in the House of Commons on 16 March. He requested that HM Treasury Financial Secretary Stephen Timms provide a statement on the Treasury's plans for the future of the Listed Places of Worship Grant Scheme (LPOWGS) beyond March 2011. Mr Baldry said: "Many communities up and down the country are trying to keep their churches in good repair, and either the scheme has to be extended or the Government must restore heritage as part of national lottery funding. Does he agree that we cannot expect this important element of our built heritage to be done on thin air?" Mr Timms responded: "The Hon. Gentleman raises an important point... We have recognised that listed churches are a special case. Our long-term aim is that a lower rate of VAT should be agreed at European level for instances of that kind, but in the meantime the joint English Heritage/Heritage Lottery Fund scheme is providing £25 million a year. We will look at that particular scheme again in the spending review."

English Heritage undertaking Places of Worship At Risk survey: call for evidence

As part of its Heritage At Risk programme, English Heritage (EH) is carrying out the first national survey to discover how many of England's listed places of worship are currently at risk of serious decay, with the results of a sample survey to be published on 30 June.

Most listed places of worship are Church of England (85%). Others are Catholic parish churches, Methodist, Baptist, United Reformed Church and other Nonconformist chapels, Quaker meeting houses, synagogues, mosques, temples and gurdwaras; as well as a number of buildings now used by faith groups but previously built as schools, cinemas or shops. EH's research has involved looking at a representative 10 per cent sample. In addition, EH is consulting with congregations to find out what matters to them about their place of worship and what they need to help them look after it. To widen its research, English Heritage is inviting stakeholders to tell it about challenges and successes they have faced with regards to listed places of worship, at <http://www.english-heritage.org.uk/server/show/nav.21499> Based on the results of this research, in partnership with a wide range of faiths, denominations and heritage groups EH will publish a practical guide bringing basic information on maintenance, fundraising, welcoming visitors, widening use, making changes, security and sustainability into a single leaflet for all faiths.

New funding transforms Scotland's non government heritage body

Fiona Hyslop, Minister for Culture announced that Historic Scotland is giving more than £360,000 over three years to support the Built Environment Forum Scotland, (BEFS) develop as the representative body for the historic environment in Scotland. BEFS, like The Heritage Alliance, supports its members by raising awareness of, and facilitating, joint issues of common interest. It brings together voluntary and professional bodies across the built environment sector in order to promote and influence new design and sustainable development.

The funding will be provided through the Voluntary Sector Funding Programme. The Minister said: "This funding will help BEFS establish itself as the one-stop-shop for the viewpoints of the historic environment voluntary sector. Their members meetings, workshop discussions and working groups will provide invaluable feedback on Government policies.

Robin Burley, Chairman of BEFS said: "We are delighted with Historic Scotland's support which is fantastic encouragement and an endorsement of the work of our members. Our plan is for BEFS to grow into a strong and coherent force for celebrating and improving Scotland's places by representing historic and built environment interests nationwide. Back

European Commission proposes EU-wide European Heritage Label

European Culture Commissioner Androulla Vassiliou has suggested that historic sites across Europe that "symbolise European integration, ideals and history" should be identified with The European Heritage Label

as an EU-wide initiative.

This proposal builds on a 2006 intergovernmental project involving 17 member states plus Switzerland (the UK is not yet involved), where 64 sites across the 18 countries have received the label after being nominated by the governments of the participating nations. Under the revamped scheme, member states would be asked to nominate up to two sites per year to receive the label. A panel of independent experts would then assess the nominations before designating a maximum of one site per country, on an annual basis.

The Commission said its European Heritage Label would not replicate initiatives such as the UNESCO World Heritage scheme, because the title would only be bestowed upon sites that have played "a key role in the history of the European Union".

The new plans will be submitted for adoption to the European Parliament and the Council of Ministers, which represents EU member states, and if approved could come into effect as early as end of 2011. Healey announces £1.8m to train more student planners

On 15 March Planning Minister John Healey confirmed an additional £1.8m to fund student bursaries for postgraduate planners, at 16 Universities. This year's funding (2010/11) will provide the full tuition fees for over 180 planning students, as well as help them with the cost of living. Students awarded bursaries are expected to work in the public sector for two of their first five years of employment after qualifying. Live or let die: SAVE announces publication of 2010 At Risk catalogue

SAVE Britain's Heritage (a member of The Heritage Alliance) has announced the publication of its 2010 buildings at risk catalogue Live or Let Die, which features a selection of historic properties in need of rescue across England and Wales. Other sections will look at successful rescues, as well as demolitions. For the first time this year's catalogue will also feature a section on buildings at risk in Scotland.

With last year's catalogue All We Need Is Love selling out in just six weeks, readers are urged to book a copy well in advance of the June publication date.

SAVE's Buildings at Risk Officer Rhiannon Tracy said: "Live or Let Die contains a fascinating and diverse selection of unloved buildings, including grand country houses, picturesque cottages, farmhouses, barns, stables, churches, chapels, mills, pubs and terraces. Some have stood empty for years, while many others are newly at risk as victims of the credit crunch. There is something for everyone in this year's catalogue, from handsome but decaying textile mills to small neglected town houses."

To reserve your copy of the catalogue (priced at £15 or £13 for Friends of SAVE) fill out the pre-order form http://www.savebritainsheritage.org/docs/SAVE_Publication_Order_Form.pdf and post to SAVE. The Alliance's Chairman to judge Restoration of the Century competition

Our Chairman Loyd Grossman will be on the judging panel to find what is being billed "the finest restoration of the noughties", in a competition run by Country Life magazine in association with estate agents Jackson, Stopps and Staff. Loyd will be joined by fellow judges Will Palin (Secretary of SAVE), Sophie Andreae (Georgian Group trustee), Tim Knox (Director of the Soane Museum) and Jeanette Winterson (author) in the quest to find the best example of privately-undertaken restoration work to a historic building carried out since January 2000.

Entries can be of any scale and of any stylistic character. Closing date is 5 May. For more information or to submit a nomination, visit <http://www.countrylife.co.uk/countryside/article/438064/Restoration-of-the-Century.html>

During the judging, Country Life will also be seeking to identify outstanding examples of workmanship by individual craftsmen and craftswomen. Back

Penfold Review interim report issued

The Penfold Review of non-planning consents has issued an interim report on its findings; taking into account a response from The Heritage Alliance. The report considers the role played by the various heritage non-planning consents; such as those for listed buildings, scheduled monuments and conservation areas. It focuses on those areas where consent regimes cause avoidable delays, are expensive to operate or impose unnecessary burdens, costs and risks. However, it does not seek to question the rationale behind such consent regimes, but rather look to find ways to make systems simpler and more cost effective. Evidence considered by the Review indicates that “between 11 per cent and 30 per cent of projects receiving planning permission also require a heritage consent”.

The recommendations include a call for better interaction between planning and non-planning consents, and for changes in the working practices and addressing resource constraints in consent-giving bodies. Launch of National Heritage Science Strategy

The National Heritage Science Strategy project's 'vision and strategy' was published this week, and launched at the opening of the Institute of Conservation's annual conference in Cardiff. The House of Lords Science and Technology Committee held an inquiry into Science and Heritage in 2006, which recommended that the sector come together to produce a national strategy for heritage science. A steering group was formed from across different organisations and disciplines to develop this strategy, and a coordinator appointed to undertake and facilitate the work.

The NHSS vision and strategy has two aims: to demonstrate the public benefit of heritage science and increase public engagement and support for it, and to improve partnership within the sector and with others by increasing collaboration to help practice make better use of research, knowledge and innovation and to enhance resources, funding and skills. One of the key recommendations is the creation of a National Heritage Science Forum to assist in the implementation of these strategic objectives.

Falling level of bids for HLF funding

According to Regeneration and Renewal, the amount of cash being sought by applicants to the Heritage Lottery Fund's Heritage Grants programme fell by nearly a quarter between 2008 and 2009. Analysis based on information received under Freedom of Information shows that the amount of money being sought by applicants to the programme in 2009 was down by 23 per cent on the previous year (£290 million, down from £377 million in 2008). The number of applicants however remained almost the same (366 in 2008 and 369 in 2009) – suggesting that applicants have moderated their ambitions in response to the reduction in the level of financial support that HLF can currently offer. Home, Sustainable home: The Victorian shows how it can be done

The Victorian Society's latest members' magazine takes up the challenge of making ordinary terraced houses more energy efficient. Pulling down Victorian houses and putting up lots of new insulated boxes in their place is not a new idea but says Ian Dungavell, Director, the cost and upheaval this would cause makes it neither likely nor realistic.

The issue illustrates how it is possible to modify a terraced house in a London Conservation Area to achieve projected annual energy bills of under £100 at current prices. Adam Wilkinson of the Edinburgh World Heritage site explains how a Victorian tenement was upgraded with secondary glazing and a ground source heat pump. And Tim Yates Technical Director of the Building Research Establishment shows how low cost and simple improvements and not least behavioural changes can achieve substantial improvements to energy performance.

The theme that older buildings play a crucial role in meeting the targets for moving to a low carbon future is one that The Heritage Alliance elaborates on in its manifesto Making the Most of our Heritage (see <http://www.heritagelink.org.uk/making-the-most-of-our-heritage/> and supporting statistics). Staffordshire Hoard saved for the West Midlands

The Staffordshire Hoard will stay in the West Midlands for the public to enjoy, it was announced on Tuesday (23 March), after the £3.285m purchase price was met following the National Heritage Memorial Fund's (NHMF) decision to grant £1.285m to the fund.

NHMF's grant, to Birmingham Museum and Art Gallery and Potteries Museum and Art Gallery in Stoke-on-Trent, will prevent the Hoard from being broken up and sold to private collectors. Dame Jenny Abramsky, Chair of NHMF, said: "We're delighted to be able to announce this news today. The Staffordshire Hoard is an extraordinary heritage treasure. It is exactly the sort of thing the National Heritage Memorial Fund was set up to save, stepping in as the 'fund of last resort' when our national heritage is at risk, as a fitting memorial to those who have given their lives in the service of our nation. We're delighted, in our 30th anniversary year, to be able to make sure it stays just where it belongs, providing rare insights into one of the more mysterious periods of our history."

3000 new jobs in sports and culture for young people

On 18 March the Department for Culture, Media and Sport (DCMS) announced three thousand new jobs for young unemployed people are to be created in the cultural and sports sectors, as part of its Future Jobs Fund. This includes 247 jobs with The National Trust (a member of The Heritage Alliance), working as trainees in gardening, catering, visitor services, conservation and administration. The jobs are based at more than 70 Trust sites across England and Wales, many in rural areas where jobs can be hard to find. Guidance and training will be provided by experienced members of Trust staff, with the aim of setting recruits up for a lasting career.

These 3,000 new jobs take DCMS beyond its target of creating 10,000 jobs across the sports and cultural sectors. For more information visit http://www.culture.gov.uk/reference_library/media_releases/6758.aspx Back

BBC's Restoration Village gives £200,000 to conservation projects

The BBC announced this week that four conservation projects are set to benefit from more than £200,000, thanks to viewers of BBC Two's Restoration Village. 2008 runners-up Watts Gallery in Surrey, Howsham Mill in North Yorkshire, Cromarty East Church in the Scottish Highlands and Dennis Head Old Beacon in the Orkney Islands will share the pot, which comes from a surplus of the amount raised during the third in the series of the BBC's Restoration programmes. The Restoration Fund was set up as an independent registered charity to distribute the money raised by the viewer vote line accompanying the BBC Two programmes, Restoration and Restoration Village. The three series of the programmes raised £1.6 million. Restoration presenter Griff Rhys Jones said: "We have to thank the viewers again for their support for all the projects throughout the series of Restoration. They gave money too. It is great to see so much enthusiasm from so many, right across the country. The money has gone where it was needed and where it will do great good."

Increasing Permitted Development: Further planning changes confirmed

Planning Minister John Healey has confirmed further changes to the planning system in England, consulted on last year and recommended in the Killian Pretty Review, which will remove an estimated 10,000 full planning applications from the system. This move follows the Improving Permitted Development (IPD) consultation, which took forward recommendations from the Killian Pretty Review for removing the requirement to apply for planning permission for certain forms of non-domestic development. Shops will now be able to extend their floor space by up to a maximum of 50 square metres without the need to apply for planning permission; and schools, hospitals and universities will be able to more easily build new facilities. At a later date, replacement shop fronts and installing cash points will also be subject to a simpler, cheaper and quicker planning process, called prior approval. These new rights will be subject to certain constraints, which are designed to minimise impacts on neighbouring properties and the wider environment. The changes to permitted development are set out in The Town and Country Planning (General Permitted Development) (Amendment) (England) Order 2010. National Waterways Museum opens heritage boatyard

On 19 March Chairman of British Waterways Tony Hales opened officially the new heritage boatyard at the National Waterways Museum in Ellesmere Port, Cheshire (formerly The Boat Museum). The Waterways Trust, National Waterways Museum and The Boat Museum Society are working together to develop a sustainable working boatyard at the museum that will be used by staff and volunteers to maintain and restore historic boats, develop and pass on heritage skills and engage museum visitors in the boat collection and its care. Roger Hanbury, Chief Executive of The Waterways Trust (a member of The Heritage Alliance) said: "The creation of a Heritage Boatyard at the National Waterways Museum presents a fantastic opportunity to enrich the visitor experience at the museum, to engage and involve young people and to conserve the nationally important historic boat collection. We are delighted with the support that we have received for the project so far, in particular from Tony Hales." For more information visit <http://nwm.org.uk/ellesmere> Back
